BALANCED BUDGET PLAN OFFERED BY MID-MAY

1 A detailed version of President Trump's budget will lay out plans to eventually erase U.S. deficits, White House budget director Mick Mulvaney said. "We're getting into that now. By May, I think it's mid-May we're shooting for right now, we'll have that larger budget." Mulvaney said on "Meet the Press." He acknowledged that the budget would not be balanced in the upcoming 2018 fiscal year but said the administration wants to put the country on a path toward eventually wiping out annual deficits. "We won't be able to balance the budget this year, but we're working on trying to get it to balance within the 10-year budget window, which is what Republicans in the House and the Senate have traditionally done in the last couple of years," Mulvaney said. NO PROOF OF CLAIMS TRUMP TOWER BUGGED

2 U.S. lawmakers from both parties said they had seen no proof to support the claim by Republican President Donald Trump that his predecessor Barack Obama had wiretapped him last year, adding pressure on Trump to explain or back off his repeated assertion. Several Republicans last week urged Trump to apologize for the allegations he made in a series of tweets. The maelstrom also caused tension with key U.S. allies and threatens to distract Republicans from campaign promises on health care and taxes. "I don't know the basis for President Trump's assertion," U.S. Sen. Susan Collins, a Republican, said on NBC's "Meet the Press." "I do believe he owes us that explanation." Collins said she supported Trump as president, but she wouldn't side with him if he "misstated what the facts are." REUTERS

INCIDENT AT WHITE HOUSE CHECKPOINT

3 One person was in custody after a suspicious vehicle drove up to a White House checkpoint on Saturday night, the Secret Service said, after CNN reported that the driver claimed to have a bomb. CNN, citing two law enforcement sources, said there was no confirmation of any device in the vehicle but that security at the White House had been upgraded. The Secret Service said an unidentified driver was taken into custody after a suspicious vehicle approached a checkpoint, but made no mention of any claims of an explosive device. Several streets around the White House were closed. REUTERS

COLORADO WILDFIRE, AT LEAST 1K EVACUATED

4 A wildfire near the University of Colorado in Boulder burned through about 62 acres of woodland on Sunday, prompting authorities to urge at least 1,000 people to evacuate the drought-hit region. The fire in Sunshine Canyon, just outside the university town, started before dawn on Sunday and is about 20 percent contained, with no injuries or damage to structures reported, said Denise White, a spokeswoman for the Boulder Emergency Operations Center. Authorities have contacted 1,000 people and told them to leave the area, she said. The number could cover individual households or multiple people in a single home. "From what we've got right now, a lot of the fire is in open space," she said. "We do have some evacuations in place." REUTERS

TRUMP'S AMERICA

THE MAN WHO COULDA TAMED DONALD

ELLIS HENICAN

Jimmy Breslin won the Pulitzer Prize for commentary in 1986, the year this photo was taken. GETTY IMAGES

Breslin's gone.

Beautiful.

Now he and McAlary can hate each other again.

It wasn't only the swagger or the feuds with fellow columnists. It wasn't only the short, punchy paragraphs. It was the climb-the-stairs reporting and the unapologetic point of view that set Jimmy Breslin apart and proves once and for all how much we need more people like him as Donald Trump keeps running circles around the media.

How would Breslin at his prime have reacted to an orange-faced, know-nothing, huckster-president who got rich slapping his name on shiny buildings? JB wouldn't have only quoted some CBO report, I promise you that. With fury and efficiency, he'd have thrown nouns and verbs like fists — and left real bruises.

How many of today's TV pundits can really claim that?

For his part, Trump just keeps copying Breslin. Aren't "Lyin' Ted," "Low Energy Jeb" and the "Failing New York Times" the direct descendants of "Society Carey"? A shot in the face is always more effective than another statistic or a drawn-out analysis. Queens boys understood that.

Breslin didn't invent the street newspaper column, and it wasn't a captive of New York. Chicago had Royko. Boston had Carr and Barnicle. Philly had Stone and Dexter even before Lopez passed through. But all of them — all of us — learned from, stole from and measured ourselves against Breslin, and he was seldom gracious about it.

Hamill was nicer. Kempton thought harder. You'll notice some lingering reserve in this morning's fawning obituaries, pieces Jimmy never would have written about himself. But 88 years, thousands of columns, a dozen books are a pretty good run for a guy whose primary professional goal strove "to please one reader, me."

Those of us who came after him all have Breslin stories to tell. The memory that lingers this morning came from my kid-reporter days. I got the story that Jimmy wanted on Queens Boulevard.

"You tryin' to pick my pocket?" he snarled on the sidewalk outside the Pastrami King. "That was somethin'."

I think that might have been the last nice thing he ever said to me. I took it to mean that I'd arrived in the city.

Canadian searchers recover bodies of two snowshoers from Boston buried in avalanche

Search crews in Canada have recovered the bodies of two Boston residents caught in an avalanche while snowshoeing in Alberta's Banff National Park, according to multiple reports.

The man and woman, both 32, were reported missing last week. Their bodies were found Friday, under 6 to 10 feet of snow on Mount Hector, CBS Boston confirmed. It said the pair were doctors, connected to Massachusetts General Hospital.

Their names were not released, in accordance with Canadian law concerning accident victims.

Officials began searching after the pair missed their checkout time Monday at their motel, which contacted Royal Canadian Mounted Police, according to the news station. Their rental vehicle was discovered on a roadside, partially covered in snow.

Officials said a short distance up the trail, they came upon a large avalanche blocking the way, and snowshoe tracks that went into the avalanche but never reappeared, CBC News Calgary reported.

The two had with them avalanche transceivers that signal a location to rescuers in the event of getting buried under the snow. Parks officials located the beacons on Thursday.

Katy Perry kissed a girl and she not only liked it — it made her curious about her sexuality

During her acceptance speech for the National Equality Award at the Humans Rights Campaign Gala, the pop singer — who became famous for the song "I Kissed a Girl" — detailed her experience with conversion groups as a teenager.

"I speak my truths and I paint my fantasies into these bite-size pop songs," she said. "For instance, 'I kissed a girl and I liked it.' Truth be told, I did more than that."

She went on to say: "How was I supposed to reconcile that with a gospel-singing girl raised in youth groups that were pro-conversion camps? What I did know was I was curious, and even then, I knew sexuality wasn't … black and white."

Perry says she's glad to have started a conversation and that the world "seemed curious enough to sing along." I mean, we'll all sing along to something catchy enough, but sure.

The 28-year-old opened up about her on-again, off-again relationship — and she says she's in it for the long haul. "I feel like every person who's in a long-term relationship goes through ups and downs. Everything isn't always going to be peaches and cream."

The two are reportedly "fighting for each other," despite living apart. The maybe couple shares one daughter.

J.Lo hangs with A-Rod's sister

The best way to prove that you're really into someone is to have other people post about your relationship on social media. Just ask Jennifer Lopez!

The singer and actress recently made a guest appearance on A-Rod's sister's Instagram. Suzy Dunand, a luxury realtor, went so far as to call her "cuñis," a Spanish slang word for sister-in-law.

This is moving fast, no?

J.Lo and A-Rod have reportedly been dating for months, and recently enjoyed some time together at an exclusive Bahamian resort.

Meanwhile, Drake is rapping about drunk texting Lopez, who apparently changed her number because she'd had enough of his tomfoolery. Sounds about right.

Tickets at bochcenter.org

Following a series of Boston Marathon portrayals-in-art — including "Boston," "Patriots Day," "Marathon: The Patriots Day Bombing," and Jake Gyllenhaal's "Stronger" — comes Boston Theater Company's "Finish Line: A Documentary Play About the 2013 Boston Marathon," a docu-play running through March 26 at the Boch Center Shubert Theatre.

Co-created in Boston by Joey Frangieh and Lisa Rafferty, the production draws on true-to-life interviews with survivors, runners, police officers, journalists and myriad others involved with the 2013 Boston Marathon Bombings. The research is hard-hitting, and finds the poignancy it deserves on stage.

Interviewees recorded, and enacted verbatim in the production include Boston Police Commissioner William Evans, news anchor Maria Stephanos and Life Is Good founder John Jacobs.

Tickets were to start at $45, but late inclement weather threw a wrinkle in the production's base fare. Josiah A. Spaulding, President & CEO of the Boch Center, explained in a statement:

"After canceling our school performance earlier this week because of the blizzard, we realized hundreds of young people would miss seeing this important play," Spaulding said. "But thanks to the generous support from an anonymous donor that was matched by Paul and Sandra Montrone, we are extremely proud to announce that we will be offering a limited number of 'pay what your heart feels' tickets to make this show available to many more people for the remainder of the run."

The "pay what your heart feels" tickets will be available for a minimum of $3, and can be purchased on a first come, first served basis the day of the performance. The Boch Center Box Office is open Tuesday-Saturday, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., and the Shubert Theatre Box Office opens two hours prior to each performance.

How to build a professional website

It's all about simplicity.

SARA FEINSTEIN
@SaraBFeinstein
sara.feinstein@metro.us

Whether you're a small business looking to branch out or someone looking to change career paths or strengthen their personal brand, having a professional website is a great way to scale your efforts.

But it's something that people don't always recognize or take advantage of says, Adam Wozney, the community manager at Wix, a company that provides free online website-building templates.

"Having a website is the perfect way to differentiate yourself from your competition," he explains. "It's something that can really showcase who you are in a unique way and it's 100 percent customizable."

Wozney gave us some tips for creating a successful professional website:

Identify one clear goal

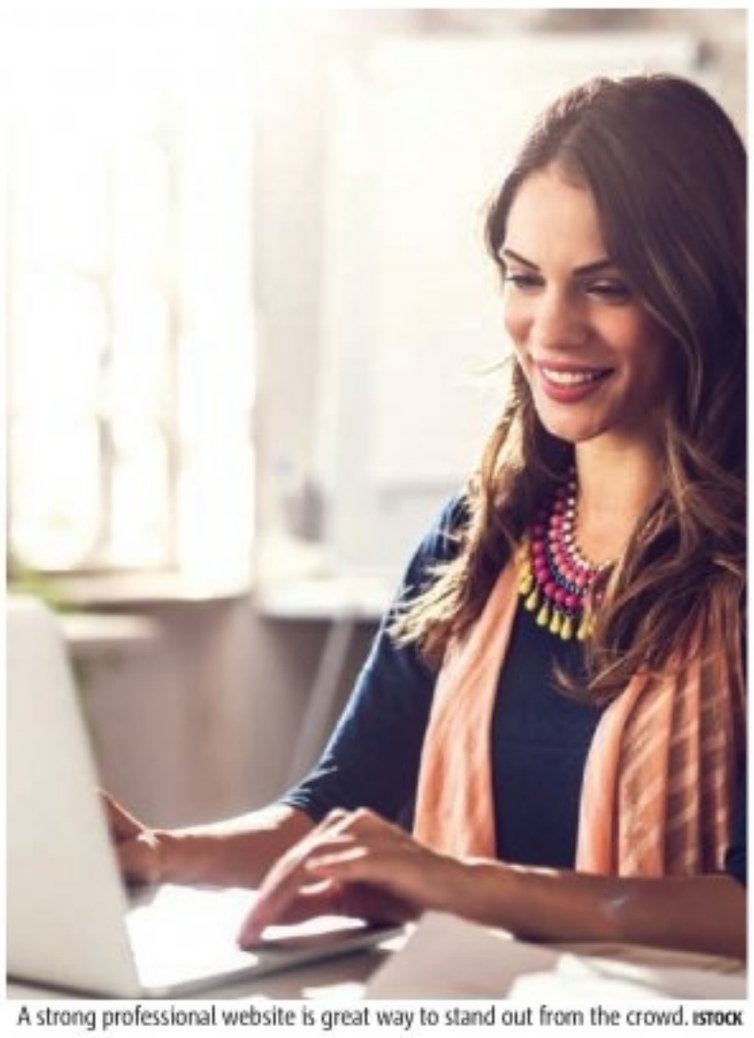
Before you even begin to tackle the design, the first thing you should do is make a list of all the possible goals you have for your website —whether it's getting people to follow you on social media, subscribe to your blog or YouTube channel or maybe even purchase a product— and then narrow it down to one main goal, says Wozney.

He gives the example of Google's landing page: "Google has been around for 17-plus years, and has their home page really changed in that time? No. Because they have one singular goal — they want people to search for things." Plus, "with so much online, it very easy to get lost in the shuffle," he explains.

Keep the design simple

When it comes to creating a strong website, simplicity is key, says Wozney. That means using a maximum of four colors and three fonts. "Anything more just feels cluttered and it becomes visually difficult to read," he explains.

Overall, when plugging in content, you should be thinking of your website as a newspaper, he adds: "You have the headline, subheadline, the text — and that's it."



A strong professional website is great way to stand out from the crowd. ISTOCK

SEO optimize

Making sure that your website is search engine optimized is the best way to drive traffic to your page, says Wozney. The easier it is for search engines to read your content, the more likely it is that you'll show up in organic results, which is why it's important to keep your copy simple. "When it comes to content, you should make sure you're writing it for an eighth-grade audience," he explains. You should also be including keywords throughout. "Say you're a coffee shop in Brooklyn, you might say: We have the best coffee in Brooklyn," he continues. "Just make sure keywords don't exceed more than four to 5 percent of your copy."

Update content

It's important to keep a regular pulse on your website and update your content once in awhile, Wozney explains. If you're photographer who has 300 new pictures to upload, rather than putting them all up at once, he suggests uploading 50 when your website launches, and then setting up a schedule where you post a couple of new pictures once or twice a week. "Keeping active on your website through uploading pictures or copy is a great way to let search engines know, 'Hey, I'm alive, and I'm posting things that are relevant to the people searching for exactly what I'm talking about," explains Wozney, "and that's just another factor that goes into getting found online."

How marijuana could save football

Marijuana remains one of the eight drugs banned by the NFL.

MATTHEW BURKE
@burke_metro
matthew.burke@metro.us

America's longtime drug of choice could very well end up saving America's longtime sport of choice.

The sport of football must find a solution (or solutions) to its concussion problem or risk becoming what boxing and horse racing are today — largely irrelevant despite a decades-long boom period in the United States.

More and more reports are saying that marijuana can — in a healthy way — help alleviate the pain that so many current and former football players experience. Not only can it help take away the pain from the daily nicks, bruises and bumps that players suffer from an opposing player's helmet off the shin or a facemask in the forearm, it is also becoming increasingly clear that it can help treat CTE, a progressive degenerative disease in the brain caused by trauma.

Cannabidiol, one of over 100 chemical compounds found in cannabis, is said to help stabilize the brain after injury.

"There may only be a few brain cells that are injured to the point of no return [during trauma]," Michael Hoffer, professor of otolaryngology at the University of Miami Miller School of Medicine, told The Atlantic in December. "There are a lot of brain cells at risk right around those cells. If we can stabilize those we can prevent the dominos from falling."

Pills vs. pot

Former Arizona Cardinals and Denver Broncos quarterback Jake Plummer has been at the forefront of a campaign called When the Bright Lights Fade, which is raising money for studies exploring how the use of cannabidiol can help treat and prevent the onset of symptoms associated with CTE.

"I'd say 80 to 90 percent of NFL players are on some kind of drug to get them through the pain and the stress and the anxiety of playing a full football season," Plummer told Metro. "And when these players are done playing, I'd say 80 to 90 percent of them continue on high priced meds for most of the rest of their lives. Whether it's cannabis or Percocet or whatever — there's a lot of drugs in the league."

Plummer is convinced that marijuana is infinitely more safe than the other pain relievers that players use.

"It's the healthiest option … that's what we'd like people to understand," he said. "I know numerous guys who have smoked their whole career, and even some that fall into that 10 to 20 percent of guys that don't take any drugs — except for cannabis.

"I think there's more and more proof coming out that it's a definite benefit. It's obviously helping these players get through the season. When you put your body through that much pain and endure so many bumps and bruises you should be allowed to use a healthy, safe, nonaddictive, nontoxic form of medicine, if you so choose."

Stoner stigma

Marijuana remains one of the eight drugs banned by the NFL and has led to fines and suspensions for many of its players. Plummer claims that the NFL knows that marijuana is a healthier alternative to many prescription pain drugs, but that the league doesn't want to take a PR hit for easing up on weed.

"We're fighting a stigma [about marijuana] that started back in the 1930s," Plummer said. "The NFL wants their players to be role models. They want their players to be what kids strive to be. So when you come out and say these players are using cannabis, they're afraid that that'll send the wrong message to these young kids that, 'cannabis is good, you should use it. You should use it no matter what.' But that's not what we're doing. We're talking about grown adults that should have a choice in medicine, being allowed the freedom to choose it without punishment.

"There's a hang-up with the NFL with their image, I believe, and they're worried that they'll be sending the wrong message to the youth that they're continuously trying to keep interested in the game of football."

In defense of pricey big man Horford

In an impressive performance last week, Celtics' $113 million dollar man looked like a high-priced big man.

It was refreshing to see Al Horford as a pretty big focal point of the offense-for the majority of a win Wednesday against the Timberwolves. He finished with 20 points, nine rebounds and eight assists.

Those stats should be seen as gravy to what Horford brings to the table on most nights.

And by now you feel one of two ways about this article:

1) Ugh, are we really going to pretend Al Horford is worth it?

2) Yes! Someone actually gets Horford's value!

Let's address the #haters.

"He doesn't score!"

No, Horford isn't going to "take over" games. He's not "going for 30". Heck, he's barely going for 20 … and that's OK. He's had two seasons where he's averaged over 17.0 points. So, relax.

Yes, he's shooting a career-low 46.2 percent from the field. But remember his game has stretched out well outside the paint and to the 3-point line over the last two seasons, contributing to a lower overall field goal percentage. For what it's worth, Horford is a 35.5 percent 3-point shooter. He's one of eight listed centers that takes at least three 3-pointers a game, and ranks fourth in field-goal percentage amongst them.

Stretch bigs are where the league has gone, folks. It's about spacing. The years of the dominant big man running the show down low are over.

And he's not going to be Isaiah Thomas, who has led the Celtics in scoring a whopping 32 straight games (fourth-most since 1976-77 NBA/ABA merger, according to Elias Sports Bureau).

While Thomas deserves a ton of credit for the scoring performance he's put on this year, he'd be the first to tell you that teammates like Horford allow for it.

"He doesn't even shoot!"

Despite averaging 32.7 minutes per game, Horford only averages 12.0 shots per game.

But what some people may fail to see is that he's still a big part of the offense regardless. Horford's five assists per game are a career-high, and he leads all NBA centers in assists. He's a facilitator.

In fact, here's what Avery Bradley told reporters about Horford's passing after Wednesday's game: "He might be the best passer on our team, one of the best passers in the NBA, to me. His playmaking ability is amazing."

Should you want Horford to be more assertive at times? Yes. We'll give you that.

But if you still don't understand Horford's worth, here's one more stat for you: Horford and Crowder are the only players who show up on the top seven five-man Celtics lineups (minimum 50 minutes of court time) based on net rating, which measures a team's point differential per 100 possessions.

Al Horford is starting to show he's worth the money. GETTY IMAGES

Translation: The Celtics' seven most effective lineups include Horford.

It's no wonder he's second on the team in plus-minus (plus-3.4 point differential) behind Crowder (plus-4.2).

So while Horford's numbers may not jump out of the box score on a nightly basis, he's doing what the Celtics need him to do to play winning basketball.

And once the playoffs come around, that's all that matters.
